DWC posts modified Interpreter Services regulations for comment

The Division of Workers' Compensation (DWC) has modified the proposed Interpreter Services regulations. DWC posted the modified regulation text and forms on the DWC website and electronically distributed the 15-day notice of modification to interested parties. Members of the public may comment on the modifications until 5 p.m. on June 5, 2013.

The proposed modifications include:

- A new section that explains how an interpreter may be certified or provisionally certified to interpret at hearings, depositions or arbitrations.
- A new section that explains how an interpreter may be certified for medical treatment appointments or medical legal exams by passing the Certification Commission for Healthcare Interpreters (CCHI) exam.
- Revisions to the remaining sections to be consistent with the changes made by the two new sections.

The notice, text of the regulations, and forms can be found here.
